

We were bereaved.

We were proud of others.

We could not believe.

We knew it was true.

We were each of us

a crucible of agony,

standing, bare as birth

before the enormity

of life.